Invisibilia: Examining Asian/American identities through photographic journals, mixed media, multimedia, and performances, three Oregon artists, Sandra Honda, Mei-ling Lee, and Jefferson Goolsby, share insights and perceptions of historical and contemporary experiences. Exploring how people navigate identity in an ever-shifting cultural landscape, the creative works question beliefs, and assumptions while offering opportunities to view the world differently.

1,000 Moons: In the months after her grandparents' deaths from COVID, Emily Jung Miller struggled to stay grounded, and the understanding of time became distorted and unreal. Miller creates a meditative corridor of time using a string of 1,175 'moons' constructed of kelp, sheet music, and other materials linked to her grandparents' history. The installation creates a visual and physical path or remembrance for all who have lost, and recall how many moons we saw together.
